ICPH Institute for Children, Poverty & Homelessness

Linda Bazerjian is the Managing Director of Communications for the Institute for Children, Poverty & Homelessness (ICPH) and its affiliate Homes for the Homeless (HFH).

For the past 14 years she has helped raise awareness and advance the public conversation about family homelessness, particularly as it impacts children.

Prior to her current role, she served as Director of Communications & External Affairs at the NYC Department of Homeless Services, where she led communications and community and government relations.

For seven years she worked as an Education Program Specialist, focused on outreach and communication with all public school stakeholders — from students and parents to media, elected officials, and partners — in the Office of the Maryland State Superintendent of Schools Nancy S. Grasmick.

She holds a BA in Journalism & Mass Communication from New York University.
